Third Libyan Base to Fall in One Month

British Aim to Crush Italy in Africa Before Germans Can Help

CAIRO (AP) — The capture of Derna, third major Italian Libyan base to fall to the British Army of the Nile, was announced Thursday by the British Middle East command.
The capture was completed Thursday morning, a GHQ communique said in announcing the fall of this strong hold 175 miles west of the Egyptian frontier.

With mechanized forces operating beyond Derna, the next objective of Gen. Archibald Wavell's desert fighters appeared to be Benghazi, 150 miles farther west of Derna.
The fall of Derna followed British capture of Bardia January 5 and Tobruk Jan. 2.

The Britten front Thursday's communique said the concentration of British forces in the Agordat-Bardia sector was "proceeding smoothly in spite of distances and physical difficulties which have been overcome."

In Italian Somaliland, farther to the south, operations were reported "in all sectors" in support of advanced patrols which have penetrated deep into that Italian colony.
Intense patrol activity, it was added, is continuing east of Metemna on the Ethiopian front.

All of these operations were said by the British to be under way in the hope of cracking Italy's colonial empire wide open before German intervention in the Middle East can materialize on a large scale.

Aid-to-Britain Bill Approved by House Group

Gerard Forecasts Nazi Fifth- Column Move Against Mexico

WASHINGTON — (AP) — The administration's British aid bill was approved by the house foreign affairs committee Thursday after efforts to write in a financial limit had been defeated.

The committee's action cleared the way for house debate on the measure, probably Monday.
The vote on final approval was taken quickly after the committee had defeated a proposal to place a 2-billion-dollar limit on transactions under the bill.

The proposal was opposed by the administration majority on the committee which Wednesday voted down to the bill a prohibition against naval escorts for cargo convoys.
"The committee action Thursday was taken about the time James W. Gerard, world war ambassador to Berlin, testified before the senate foreign relations committee that the Nazi would seize Mexico if Great Britain were defeated." He said he favored a declaration of war against Germany.

Supporting the British aid bill, Gerard told the senate committee if Germany is victorious "we will meet the first shock of her attack in the countries to the south of us."
Germany and Italy now are sending "vast sums" to Mexico and other Latin American countries, he said, adding that if Germany wins the war in Europe "Mexico will be seized by the Nazis."

Gerard said he could see no hope for a negotiated peace in the war and he urged congress to furnish this country with a "lightning defense" against lightning war by passing the British aid bill.

Defeat Convoys Ban
A proposal to prohibit use of United States naval vessels to convoy supplies to Britain had been rejected by the House Foreign Affairs Committee Wednesday as it neared the end of its consideration.

The action was taken with approval of administration members, and Chairman Bloom (Dem. N. Y.) later said that if the Constitution or any existing statute authorizes the president to order the navy to escort duty, this language would not be affected by the language agreed upon.
Representative Mundt (Rep., S. D.) unsuccessfully offered the amendment prohibiting convoy duty before a senate committee earlier, had opposed such a ban, saying "No one can tell

Here's Aid U. S. Has Sent to Great Britain Thus Far in Europe's War

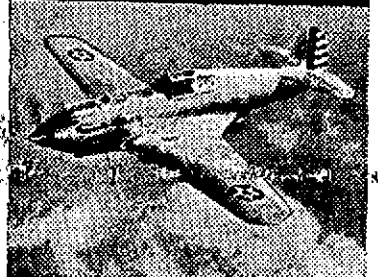

Planes and Ships Lead Long List of War Supplies

By NEA Service
What aid-to-Britain might mean in the future is powerfully indicated by the American aid that has already gone to the island citadel.

Though all-out help now being debated has not begun to flow across the Atlantic and though special plants built to produce war materials are in general not yet operating, a look at the records for the last year and a half shows the United States is playing a major role in the firm stand the British are making.

Here is the proof, in a summary of the aid already sent:

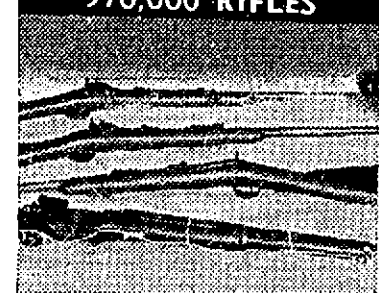

2500 PLANES

Until June, 1940, most of U. S. plane exports went to France. With France's fall, planes were turned to Britain. The Foreign Policy Association estimates that in 14 months ending in October, 1940, 1056 planes had been sent to Britain, 427 to Canada, and 142 to other British areas. Since October the number has increased to around 300 a month, so that the total number of planes already shipped to Britain or its dominions and areas allied with it, is probably close to 2500.

Intervention in Europe Will Bring Sinkings

Hitler Makes Threat Against 'Non-European Intervention'

BERLIN — (AP) — Adolf Hitler said Thursday "Germany has no quarrel with the American people" but declared if "non-European powers try to intervene here Europe will rise. Every ship that comes within the reach of our torpedoes will be torpedoed."

These words drew the longest applause of his entire 1-hour-32-minute speech in Berlin's great Sports Palace where Nazi party men and the government celebrated the 8th anniversary of Hitler's rise to power. "Germany never attacked the American continent," Hitler said. That followed, to a tumult of cheering, his reference to a "non-European" intervention and the torpedoing.

Predicts Victory
For his immediate hearers and the entire nation at its radios he predicted "victory within the year," and said:

"The period lying behind us has already practically decided this war. France has been defeated and England crowded off the continent."

The fuhrer said in the shadow of banners saying, "Victory is with our colors."

"We are standing on this continent, and where we are standing nobody can crowd us off."

"When the hour comes we will land a decisive blow."

Turning to the British he asked: "What are they hoping for? For America."

"I can only say we have calculated every possibility. There will be victory within the year. Germany has no quarrel with the American people."

"This time you do not find a weakened Germany, but one that is highly mobilized and full of fight."

"As regards Italy, let me one in-bate an effort to require posting of notice of intention to wed for a period of five days before issuance of a marriage license."

A strong bloc led by Beck of West Memphis voted 17 to 11 to strike from a bill by Pilkinton of Hope and Mitchell of Prescott two sections containing the advance-notice provision. The action left in the bill only a provision increasing the minimum marriage age for girls from 14 to 16 and for men from 16 to 18.

Beck opposed the five-day notice proposal on grounds that it would seriously impair revenues accruing to county clerks from the sale of marriage licenses.

Pilkinton and Mitchell contended would prevent hasty marriages and "preserve our homes."

The authors of the bill said elimination of the five-day notice section in effect killed the bill.

The senate passed 22 to 6 a bill by Gordon of Dermott which would repeal the Arkansas inheritance tax and substitute for it a law under which the state would be entitled to 80 per cent of the inheritance taxes collected in Arkansas by the federal government.

Overriding a resolution previously adopted calling for committee nomination the house voted Thursday to name its five members to the highway bond refunding board by nominations from the floor.

Balloting on the board members started after 62 members of the house had voted in a standing count to reconsider the vote by which the previous resolution, by Campbell of Garland, calling for committee nominations, was adopted last Tuesday.

Campbell then withdrew the resolution.

WE, THE WOMEN

Marriage Is Not "Strained" When Wife Earns the Most

By RUTH MILLETT

Fifty-six thousand couples in 1936 faced the problem of making a success of a marriage partnership where the wife's pay check was larger than the husband's.

That figure comes from a Treasury tabulation, just made public, of net incomes of less than $5000 a year.

Since psychologists warn us so frequently that such a problem puts a terrific strain on a marriage, it would be interesting to know how many of those marriages are still working.

The batting average is probably higher than the predictions of pessimistic psychologists would lead us to believe.

Bigger Wife's Pay Check The Better

For a great number of those couples are undoubtedly young folk in the first years of marriage, with the husband just beginning to get a toe-hold in his business or profession.

Bob Alton Is Dance Director

Tosses Out 'Dance Numbers' by the Dozen

By HERMAN ALLEN

AP Feature Service Writer

NEW YORK — Bob Alton is a dance director who hates "dance numbers." To heck with them, he says.

He's throwing them out of the Broadway shows he works on (he's done 25) and hopes to see the day when his one-man revolt will topple the old ideas of musical comedy dancing right into the orchestra pit.

"I'll have to explain that," he said before a rehearsal of "Pal Joey," his latest success. "By 'dance numbers,' of course, I mean those lavish conglomerations of costumes and steps they used to toss in between scenes. They had no purpose except to give the customers a look at some pretty girls and to break up the show."

"My idea is not to break up the show but to make the dances part of the show—make them carry the plot forward."

"I first put my ideas into effect in 'Leave It to Me.' I've done the dances in five shows since then. In all of them I applied my ideas as closely as the book would allow."

The Alton technique abandons the old chorus line. Each dancer, male or female, is treated individually. Each does a different step or series of steps, but all blend into one effect. More often than not, the dancers are scattered all over the stage.

Alton, 32, comes from a family that you'd never expect would produce a dancer. His father was in the coal and lumber business at Bennington, Vt. Alton studied with the celebrated ballet master Mordkin and for two years staged vaudeville shows in a St. Louis movie house before he got his first chance in the big-time dance field seven years ago.

such a life-time view of their finances.

No unpleasantness over money need ever arise if the two put their earnings in a family "kitty" and neither ever thinks, much less says, "my money." And if the wife never assumes for one destructive moment that she should be the "star boarder" in the family simply because she happens temporarily to be contributing more than half to the family bank account.

This problem that has been built up to such a bugaboo should not frighten any young folks who find themselves facing it. Any couple with a determination to make their marriage succeed can lick it easily.

The couple who would have trouble over money, anyway—even if the wife never earned a cent in her life.

Bruce Catton Says:

By BRUCE CATTON, NEA Washington Correspondent

War Secretary One of Busiest Men in Capital

WASHINGTON — When the President made Henry L. Stimson secretary of war last June, general belief was the 73-year-old statesman wouldn't stick around very long. Once the draft bill was passed and the election campaign was over, most observers had him tabbed to retire.

Stimson fooled them. He not only shows no signs of quitting, but he has made himself vastly more than a mere figurehead—which is what a great many secretaries of the service departments really are, especially those getting on in years. Today Stimson is one of the busiest officials in Washington. By virtue of his place in the all-important Office of Production Management, he actually outranks most of his cabinet colleagues—in effect, if not technically.

Theory was that Stimson was rather frail and would take things easy. On the contrary, he gets enough work done each day to make the ordinary retirement age look silly.

His day begins at 6:30 each morning in his suburban home of Woodlawn, a spacious house in some 18 acres of ground in the fashionable northwest section of Washington. He breakfasts promptly, reading the papers as he eats, and then takes on a batch of correspondence which an army driver has brought up from the War Department. Then he is driven to work in an army car, checking in at his office a little after 9 o'clock.

Goes Home For Lunch

First item of business is always an appointment with an officer from the statistics branch of the general staff. Stimson calls this an orientation conference.

After this comes the daily routine. There may be a meeting of the Office of Production Management, or conferences with one or more of the defense commissioners. Chairman of house or senate military affairs committees may be on hand to talk over pending army legislation. General George C. Marshall, chief of staff, may step in from his next-door office to talk over some matter of policy.

At noon there is another orientation conference—this one with an officer from the intelligence division of the general staff, who brings in a full digest of the department's latest news concerning the war.

By 1, usually, Secretary Stimson can go home for lunch. More often than not he will have one or more luncheon guests to talk over department ST. LOUIS —(P)— The smart man will not throw his straw hat on the baseball diamond next summer, or pitch the old home in the trash can. He may have to wear it another season—and like it.

The reason is that the straw hat industry—another war victim—foresees difficulty in getting materials for the 1942 crop.

Manufacturers here say the shortage may even be noticed at the retail counter this summer, although most manufacturers had placed orders from 18 months to two years ahead.

Materials for most straw hats, even the very cheapest, are imported. The bulk comes from the Orient or other areas involved in the war.

ment business. By 2:30 he is back at his desk—except on Fridays, when the Cabinet meets—and he stays there until around 5:30.

His trips of inspection to army posts or construction jobs are infrequent but thorough. Before each trip his military aide prepares an outline of the work that is going on at the place to be inspected; when he gets there, Secretary Stimson knows in advance just what to look for, and where, and can make the inspection quickly and effectively.

Stimson gets enough exercise to keep fit by horseback riding and by regular evening games of deck tennis at his home. Playing with him usually are officers from the War Department or a few State Department cronies whom he knew during his own regime there. The games are followed by tea, and dinner is at 7:30.

Mr. and Mrs. Stimson rarely go out in the evening, although they entertain frequently with small, informal dinners. The day ends fairly early, with the secretary generally retiring by 10 o'clock.

NEXT: A day with Secretary Knox.

Not One, a Million Leaders Needed

In times of stress and crisis, leadership is everything.

The United States needs leadership—not the leadership of one man, to which several European countries have turned, tired and beaten by struggle and complexity—but leadership in every field. It is no longer enough for any man to be a leader simply in his own field—the leader of today must see the relationship of his special field to the whole, and act accordingly.

Nobody ever accused James Truslow Adams of being a wild radical. He is a conservative business man turned historian. Yet he believes that the American scheme of things as living men have known it is now being given its last chance.

In a recent article in "Barron's," Adams appeals to business men to show themselves again capable of the leadership which once made them the heroes of America. He sees a need to the business man from the politician, especially since the defense drive has put so great a premium on efficiency. These factors, he feels, have "given the business leaders a new chance, and perhaps their last, to prove their value to the great society and to provide for it that leadership and service without which no class can permanently survive."

Business leaders must realize, Adams warns, that today "a high business position, as has been said of public office, is a public trust and not merely a well-paid job." Business men like Knudsen and Stettinius have given up well-paying jobs to help their country are merely one example, Adams says; every business man must now devote part of his time, energy, and thought to the general welfare, for it is at least realized that even a well-paying business is of no value if the whole country goes to smash.

What Adams has so trenchantly pointed out to business men is true, of course, of all men occupying positions of authority and influence. It is true of labor leaders, of lawyers, of financiers, of artists, of all who wield power in any form.

All are on trial today. All will be judged in the future by the degree to which they have served society in general.

Philip Gibbs Turns to Dunkirk for Vivid New Novel

Philip Gibbs links World War I and World War II in stirring, real-life drama in his novel of the British Expeditionary Force of 1939, "South of the Others" (Doubleday, Doran; $2.50). Here is a vivid picture of the "sitings"—that war of nerves which preceded invasion of the Lowlands. Here, too, is the miracle of Dunkirk, and the British valor that made it possible.

But it is not all battle. There is the tenderness of a 1917 lover returning to find his French sweetheart again, and of new romances born of war-torn times. The echoes of the past sound above the roar of guns.

And Gibbs catches fully that feeling of false security which the Maginot Line gave to France. With a French soldier, you'll understand the phobia, the damp of life underground, of muddy, dark tunnels, and days without sunshine, that battered French morale far more disastrously than German guns.

One of the most significant passages is Gibbs' analysis of the betrayal of those who fought and died in 1914-18 for an empty victory. Those million dead betrayed by those who lived.

"They had been betrayed by makers of a foolish peace which sowed the seeds of new wars . . .

"They had been betrayed by statesmen who thought only in terms of power, politics and military alliances and never in a new spirit of justice and human fellowship.

"They had been betrayed by those who feared at a policy of appeasement and clamoured for war while refusing to vote for any strength of arms by which war might be made . . .

"Finally they were betrayed by incompetence at home, false optimism, jolly confidence without awareness of grim and terrible forces moving toward them; wasters of time when their enemies were toiling like slaves to forge the engines of war and a stupendous machinery of destruction.

"But those million dead who lay beneath the little white crosses in France and Flanders were not betrayed by the boys who came after them—their sons."

It has been estimated there are approximately 742,367 different ways in which to serve eggs.

SERIAL STORY

CONSCRIPT'S WIFE

BY BETTY WALLACE

COPYRIGHT, 1941.
NEA SERVICE, INC.

YESTERDAY Suzanne regrets her angry denunciation of Martha, but the damage is done. Bill leaves the hospital without another word to Paul. Martha begs him to believe in her, tells him Paul has been a loyal friend to Bill and to her. Bill leaves her to stop seeing Paul.

GREEN-EYED MONSTERS

MARTHA MARSHALL never remembered, afterward, what she said to Bill when he asked her to resign from Air Transport. All she remembered was the sick surprise, the sudden aching sense of loss.

She loved her job. She loved the busy office, the ringing telephone. She loved the feeling of competence and usefulness, the heartening self-respect for herself as an individual, that came at her desk.

Yet though the blood pounded in her temples, though her knees felt queer, she promised, of course. Afterward, she had that to cling to. Bill had asked, and she had promised.

Maybe he was right. She set her lips. Only a few months, after all. Perhaps it wasn't much to ask. Perhaps knowing that Bill could have no doubts, no fears, while she lived at Helen's would be worth this price.

So, the day Helen came home from the hospital, she asked gaily, "Think you can stand me around the house until Bill gets out of the Army?"

"Helen's face glowed. 'Martha! Do you mean it? Darling, it would be wonderful! But you mustn't unless you really want to. Don't do it just because—because I need you.'"

"Of course I want to! There's only one string to it. I've simply got to get my car and Butch."

"The children will love him."

THE children did love him. They loved him almost to death. Poor Butch, whose life had been peaceful and easy, was forced to fetch sticks whether he felt like it or not. His naps were interrupted by childish fingers pulling at his tail or twirling his ears. The baby climbed up on his broad back and used him for a pony. Genie tormented him until Martha wanted to scream.

Paul, who had left the hospital the day after Suzanne's outburst, had not written or phoned. Martha understood that. Just as he must understand the reason for her resigning.

Bill became a soldier. They tramped the woods beyond the camp, they sat for hours in the car, talking and making plans for the future.

Once in a while, Bill asked casually, "See anybody from home?" She always said, "No. How would I?"

THE camp became as familiar to Martha as the field outside Air Transport once had been. She even made the acquaintance of a plump little person who was the wife of a Regular Army sergeant and who bragged about having lived on army posts from Schofield, in Hawaii, to Fort Davis, in the Canal Zone.

"Me," said Aggie Moore gaily, "I'm a maneuver widow from way back. Always swear I'll stay home—and always come trotting along." She sent Martha a shrewd glance, there in the NCO clubroom, where she had invited Martha to wait while Bill scouted around after his pass. "It keeps them happy, you know. No little green snakes sliding under the bunk, no 'wonder who's kissin' her now' blues."

Martha laughed. But the blood was warm in her face. Aggie Moore went on, matter-of-factly, "You can't make a soldier out of a guy the jealousy bug's been eating on. And let me tell you, in the Army like every place else, it's the girl behind the guy who counts!"

"You know what they're doing now? New enlistees can't marry until they've made one of the first three pay grades. It may be because the brass hats think a soldier lower than third can't support a wife. But if you ask me—and I've been in the Army 10 years—it's because wives certainly can play hell with the Army!"

The other girl sent her a quick, appraising glance. "I hope you won't think I'm butting in where I don't belong, Mrs. Marshall—but just lately I've been hearing that your husband's getting to be a regular guardhouse lawyer."

"Guardhouse lawyer? I—I don't understand . . ."

"You know, lots of word, not so much behind it. Unco-operative, you could call it. Argumentative. Not that he's an out-and-out gold-bricker, but—well—he hasn't seemed so happy in the Army."

"Has he been giving trouble?" Martha asked swiftly.

"Oh, nothing much. Extra fatigue, K. P. But I just thought—"

SHE did not connect that with the fact that only a few hours later Bill remarked, "Funny, you never hear from anyone. I should think an old friend might call up sometime. Maybe even drive over." His eyes watched her.

"Do you mean Suzanne? Or my landlady?"

He dropped it. But the next week, he was at it again. And now Martha realized that this was serious. This was what occupied his mind, when it should be on soldiering.

She was suddenly, devastatingly angry. "Look here, Bill, this has been on your mind a long time. You've kept asking me. Over and over. Last week and the week before. Do you think I'm seeing Paul? Is that it? You're so busy stewing about Paul, you have no time to apply yourself to learning what you were sent here to learn! Stop hinting! Simply ask me whether I've seen him. I'll tell you."

"Well, have you?"

"No!" Her fingers were shaking. "Don't you believe me? Bill, what's the matter with you? I'm doing everything I possibly can to please you. I'm there at Helen's—I'm stuck, like a vegetable in a stew! All I have to look forward to are these Sunday visits. And now you're—"

"So you're stuck, at Helen's? Not as gay as having dates with Paul, huh?"

SHE stared at him, aghast. All these weeks, he had been nursing this resentment which she thought was ended. All these weeks, jealousy had been gnawing at him. She could see it in his eyes, ugly and angry. He was like a stranger.

"Bill," she pleaded, "you know I haven't seen Paul since the accident. Why can't you forget it? There's no use dragging it up now—no use our quarreling over a thing that never meant anything in the first place—a thing that's over, done with—"

"How can I be sure?" he asked coldly.

"You might try building a fence around me!" she snapped bitterly. And then she was running, and Bill was running after her.

Oh, they made it up, that time. But it was still there, the next time she went to the camp. Like an evil miasma floating in the air around them. Like a veil of fog, through which she tried to reach her husband and couldn't.

She thought about it at night, alone in her bed in the room which she shared with Helen. If Bill kept this up, resigning her job had been futile. She might as well be earning a living, might as well be living, doing the work she loved. Would nothing drive out of his mind this mad jealousy?

The Stuka mortar is a British weapon to begin with, and 316 of them left over from the World war, with 93,113 shells for them, were similarly sold. Other miscellaneous surplus material went to Britain in this indirect channel included 1350 cannons and limbers for 75-mm. guns, 10,200 tripods, 100,000 ammunition belts, 1,000,000 magazines, 18,000 Lewis gun barrels and 30,000 Lewis magazines, 17,716.5 pounds of TNT.

In September, 1940, when pressure from the German campaign against British shipping first became severe, the famous "destroyer deal" was made, in which the United States exchanged 50 destroyers of World war vintage not strictly up to date, but definitely serviceable, for the right to lease naval bases on various British possessions.

Similarly regarded as surplus material were 229 light World war tanks sold to Canada as still valuable for training purposes even though unequal to modern combat conditions.

Through the U. S. Maritime Commission, 132 ships were transferred to Britain between September, 1939 and December, 1940, and 43 to Canada. This added a tonnage of 532,525 to merchant shipping available to Britain, and, in December, 16 additional ships were authorized to be sold to Britain from the maritime commission's laid-up fleet. German Planes Attack Dover

Many Balloons Sent to Earth in Flames

LONDON —(P)—German fighter planes slashed at the Dover barrage Thursday in the heaviest assault on that target since last summer, while other raiders bombed London and outlying sections of Britain in the most persistent daylight attacks in weeks.

Several deaths were reported in the London area.

Some of the big silver bags at Dover were shot down by planes under cover of heavy overhanging clouds. Dover citizens took to cover as the planes sent the balloons down in flames.

The attackers held control of that section of the Kent coast for half an hour.

While this attack was going on, other Nazi formations swept across the Dover strait and strewn bombs over London, the eastern Midlands, East Anglia, and southeast England.

Three daylight alerts sounded in London and the ministry of home security announced some shops and houses in the capital were damaged but that casualties were few.

Most of the raiders blasting at inland points came singly.

Prescott Whips Bobcats 29-28

Local 'B' Team Takes Prescott Seconds 14-13

The Prescott High School basketball team nosed out the Hope Bobcats 29 to 28 in a non-conference battle at Prescott Wednesday night.

Willis, of Prescott, was high point man with 9 points, closely followed by a team-mate, Eley, who scored 7 points. Oliver headed the Hope offense with 6 points.

While the seniors were losing by one point the Hope "B" eked out a one point win over Prescott's "B" team, final score being 14 to 13.

On Friday night the Bobcats meet North Little Rock in a conference game at the high school gymnasium. Saturday the Hope basketball team will play host to Pine Bluff in another conference game. On Monday night, Feb. 3, the Bobcats will sponsor a donkey cage game in an effort to raise funds for the purchase of honor sweaters.

Refugees--Rich, Royal, Ritzy

A few of the gilded refugees and repatriates now adorning the shores of the land of opportunity and safety.

By MILTON BRONNER
NEA Service Staff Correspondent

America, long the land of hope and promise for poor immigrants and poorer refugees, has in the past year become a haven of peace for royalties without thrones, socialites whose exclusiveness was as marked as their proud genealogies, internationalists whose doings were manna for the gossip writers, and more rich men who got some part of their fortune out of Europe before the Nazi blitzkrieg started blitzing in deadly earnest.

Fortune magazine in its February issue carries an article on these rich, royal and ritzy refugees and repatriates and finds that a new type has come over in luxury liners or transatlantic clippers instead of in the steerage.

Many of the new immigrants do not propose to work here. Some even hope they will not have to stay long.

Experts Ride With Nazi Army

Many Specialists Are Attached to Army

By ANGUS M. THUERMER
AP Feature Service

BERLIN — You can meet in France today many German officers who have no interest in guns and field maneuvers.

Doesn't sound like the German army does it?

But ask one of those fellows how to run a coal mine, where and how the best steel is made in occupied France. Ask him for 20 ways that an army can use wool, mercury, mineral oils. He'll tell you—and how!

He would be one of the many specialists attached to the German armed forces. Before the war he might have been an economic expert at a university, a crack industrial leader, a production chief, a factory manager or a business expert.

Came the war and mobilization. He was ordered to the "war economics staff."

Members of this branch went with or followed closely behind fighting troops in France. Consultation with his economic adviser might have caused an artillery commander to bombard all around an important industrial plant without firing a shell into the plant itself.

Germany was watching out for factories which might be turned to producing goods for the Reich as soon as troops had driven past.

The value of each known industrial unit in fighting areas was known to economic officers when they went into the field.

An economic officer, upon entering a town in which a factory was known to be operating, would see that it was supplied as soon as possible with electric current, water, coal or whatever was needed to keep it making what it had been making under French control.

Behind this organization of specialists is Reichsmarshal Hermann Goer-

MANY NEVER SUSPECT CAUSE OF BACKACHES

This Old Treatment Often Brings Happy Relief

Many sufferers relieve nagging back-aches quickly, once they discover that the real cause of their trouble may be fluid kidneys. The kidneys are Nature's chief way of taking the excess acids and waste out of the blood. They help protect people from about a pint a day. When disorder of kidney function permits poisonous matter to remain in your blood, it may cause nagging backache, rheumatic pains, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up at night, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness. Frequent or scanty passages with burning and burning sometimes shows there is something wrong with your kidneys or bladder.

Don't wait! Ask your druggist for Doan's Pills, used successfully by millions for over 40 years. They give happy relief and will help the 15 million of kidney troubles that are a waste from your blood. Get Doan's Pills.

Harrison May Head Senate

Another Step to Preserve Unity of Democrats

By JACK STINNETT

WASHINGTON—Political observers see in the election of Sen. Pat Harrison, of Mississippi, as president pro tem of the senate another definite step for the preservation of unity in Democratic ranks.

Less serious probes into things behind the news see it merely as Senator Harrison's coming to his own, after nine years in the House of Representatives, 21 years in the Senate... and 30 years of being one of the most consistently popular men on Capitol Hill.

The two observations fall into a pattern. The Senator's acid tongue has for many years made him one of the most feared adversaries in debate. In other days, when the Democrats were in the minority, he was the "Democratic gadfly" sailing about the Senate an annoying the Republicans on every issue that came up. But through it all, he managed somehow to save the wounds he made and pull out his stingers with a soothing word that invariably left his victims more deeply in his friendship than before.

Third Term Supporter

In the intra-party fracas of recent years, Senator Pat has been on both sides. He has scored the New Deal on occasion and ripped into administration policies. But he also has fought just as hard with his shoulder against that of the most rabid New Dealer since when the third term issue popped, he was one of the first to declare the country must have the President for another four years. And this in spite of the fact that when the post of majority leader was open and he definitely was in line for that important party assignment, President Roosevelt threw it to Senator Alben Barkley.

There is a story that Senator Harrison agreed to take the job of president pro tem, provided Vice President Wallace should stay on the job. The Senator said he did not want to be "tied to the chair." He was assured that he would not be, but the laugh may be on the Senator on that score, for the conviction is growing that the new Vice President is going to spend much of his time on good-will missions, especially in Latin and South American countries.

That, too, fits into the picture drawn by political observers, for what man could be so valuable to the administration as the Senator who in the presence of the Vice President as "Pat Harrison"? The Mississippi can pour more oil on troubled party waters in a minute than most Senate presidents could in a lifetime.

Has Mellowed Some

Senator Pat is nearing 60. He has mellowed some in recent years. His voice has lost its whiplash sting. His once-red hair is thinning and ashen. His shoulders are a little stooped, but when occasion arises, he still is the same Pat who used to delight the galleries with his exchange of expletives with Indiana's Republican Jim Watson in the 'twenties and could delight his colleagues even more by whispered quips. Of the latter, an example:

After belaboring not only the Republicans but Senator Watson personally, Senator Harrison crossed the aisle and tapped his opponent on the shoulder, saying, "Jim, ain't I the worst demagogue you ever heard?" To which Watson replied, "No, Pat, I am."

Senator Harrison rose to his high post from a newsboy in the small Mississippi town in which he was born. He has been a politician all his adult life, serving six years as county attorney right after he finished college and coming to the House in 1910. In recent years, as chairman of the finance committee, he has had

With one foot securely in high society and the other in high finance, the refugee Rothschilds, Ernied long ago, most of the Austrian and French members are safely here. A great part of the Austrian fortune was seized by the Nazis. The French Rothschilds fared little better. There is no danger, however, that any of them will go to the poor house.

U. S. Watches Alien Assets

Last category among the new immigrants is composed of business men, some in the multimillionaire class, some with small capital. Many of the rich men got capital out of their respective countries before the German invasion. But Uncle Sam has frozen a lot of these refugee assets. This prevents the Nazi masters of Germany from grabbing the money. On the other hand, the real owners are restricted. They can get up to $500 per month for their living expenses, but above that sum they must receive a license from the Federal Reserve Bank before being allowed to draw more cash.

In Czechoslovakia before the German invasion, every time one turned around one heard the name of Polak. They were in banks, coal, glass, chemicals, a dozen other things. Their wealth was estimated at $180,000,000. Today Hans Petschek and his nephew, Victor, are in America. Forseeing trouble, they got a comfortable $10,000,000 over to the United States. They intend to become American citizens and have already set up two factories.

Another Czech who came here, Jan Bata, was head of the biggest shoe manufacturing company in the world. Besides his huge plants in Czechoslovakia, Bata had them all over the world. One of them is in Maryland. From Germany came Fritz von Opel, who sold his Opel automobile factories to General Motors for $8,000,000, which he wisely sent to America. Today he owns an oil company in Tennessee and a brewery in Massachusetts. Among other former European business tycoons who are in this country and looking around for investments, are Fritz Mandl, once munitions king of Austria, and Danny Heinemann, electric utility magnate of Belgium and Holland.

Most Businessmen Are Small

The Fortune article estimates that since 1933 about five billion dollars of private capital has been sent to America.

Far busier than the rich refugees are the small business men who have been quick to see chances to manufacture things new to the American market. Out of 1000 recent refugees from Germany, Poland and Czechoslovakia, 36 per cent have been engaged in commerce or as merchants and will probably try to start in similar lines here.

Of 149 refugee business enterprises, 118 had capital investment of less than $5000 each. The remaining ones had capital of from $5000 to $50,000.
